DETAILED ACTION

Response to Amendment

1. This Office action is in response to the applicant's communication received on October 13, 2006.
2. Claims 1-55 are presented for examination.
3. The applicant has amended claims 1-8, 21, 47, and 54 in the amendment received on October 13, 2006. The amendment received on October 13, 2006 also added new claim 55.
4. Applicants' arguments with respect to claims 1-55 have been considered but are deemed to be moot in view of the new grounds of rejection.

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 101

5. 35 U.S.C. 101 reads as follows:

Whoever invents or discovers any new and useful process, machine, manufacture, or composition of matter, or any new and useful improvement thereof, may obtain a patent therefor, subject to the conditions and requirements of this title.

6. Claims 1, 9, 21, 29, 41, and 47 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 101 because the claimed invention is directed to non-statutory subject matter. As follows:

The examiner acknowledges the amendments to claims 1 and 47. Although, claims 1 and 47 have been amended, these claims remain non-statutory because of the reasons set forth below in the 101 rejection.

Claims 1, 9, 21, 29, 41, and 47 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 101 because the claimed invention is directed to non-statutory subject matter. Claim 1, 21, and 47 are directed to searching desired data records, each data record comprises a text string, the data records have a field descriptor that defines specific data and the data records have a value descriptor that defines a field value.

Claims 9, 29, and 41 are directed to searching text strings associated with data records and generating a result to identify text-strings that include a value descriptor. The claimed inventions, as a whole must accomplish a practical application. That is, it must produce a “useful, concrete, and tangible result.” State Street, 149 F.3d at 1373, 47 USPQ2d at 1601-02. MPEP 2106. In each of these cases the result a field descriptor defining a record data field and a value descriptor defining a value of a specific record field (claims 1, 21, and 47); and a result set that identifies text-strings that include a value descriptor (claims 9, 29, and 41). The claimed limitations are an abstraction as they are not useful, concrete, and tangible; they are not put in any tangible form and not useful because they are not presented in a way to provide some result that is of utility that may exist in the specification however no specific use is provided for in the claimed invention. Thus the claims are non-statutory and stand rejected under 101 as not producing a “useful, concrete, and tangible result.”

Independent claims 1, 21, and 47 are searching for desired data records, but what happens to the data records after the search is conducted and the records are found. Usually, a search results in a retrieval of data (data records), but what is actually missing from the claims is a retrieval step. Once the data (data records) has been retrieved, and then is the data (data records) being presented as output, display, etc.? What is the manipulation and/or transformation in the data that would bring about a useful, concrete, and tangible result? At best, the claims are descriptive of the internal components of a data record. It is well known in the art of data processing that a record consists of data fields. The record is being descriptive of a field descriptor that defines a specific field of text with the data record and a value descriptor that defines a value associated with the specific data field. The two claim limitations "field descriptor" means and "value descriptor" means are not producing a useful, concrete, and tangible result. The "field descriptor" and the "value descriptor" means are only being descriptive about the internal storage fields that exist within a data record. Again, these claim limitations are only giving a name to components that are stored within fields of a data record.

As for claims 9, 29, and 41, these claims produce a first result set, however the result set is identifying text strings that consist of a value descriptor means. These value descriptors again are internal storage components of fields that exist within a data record. There should be a further step that should come after the "first result set" to identify how the initial search result would bring about a useful, concrete, and tangible result.

Thus, the dependent claims 2-8, 10-20, 22-28, 30-40, 42-46, and 48-55 are also rejected for being dependent upon the above recited independent claims, these claims are also rejected for the reasons set forth above.
